Dear Parents and Guardians:

Writing to you with my weekly update. I have very little new information to share with you this week. The Governor repeated today that he will let us know tomorrow the status of reopening the schools. We are hopeful that he will also answer other questions as well such as whether or not there can be summer school for those who need it, when and how we will hold the school budget vote, as well as some other questions that remain unanswered.

The one bit of news today involved the August administration of the Regents examinations. The State Education Department today cancelled that testing. This makes sense as August exams are generally re-takes for June failures. To remind you, students who successfully pass their Regents course this year will get credit for that Regents exam.

Please plan on another message from me tomorrow as soon as the Governor announces the information regarding the rest of the school year and potential for return.

Be well,

Dr. Martin D. Handler
Superintendent
